

June 1st, 2018

Secretary Kristjen Nielsen
Department of Homeland Security
Washington D.C. 20528

Dear Secretary Nielsen,

We, the undersigned, are researchers and clinicians who are deeply concerned about the revised policy of the Departments of Justice and Homeland Security to separate migrant children, some as young as 12 months of age, from their families.

The scientific evidence is clear that early life experiences and resulting development shape a person for their lifetime. This “critical period” in early life can set the stage for cascading effects on psychological and biological wellbeing.

We also know that, during this critical period, parents play a vital role in facilitating the growth and development of their children. Decades of psychological and brain research have demonstrated that forced parental separation and placement in incarceration-like facilities can have profound immediate, long-term, and irreparable harm on infant and child development. These effects include, but are not limited to:

Socioemotional Development:

- Impaired attachment relationships
- Impaired peer relationships
- Despair and flat emotional reactivity
- Depression
- Anxiety
- Stereotyped behaviours
- Difficulties with eating

Post Trauma Responses:

- Nightmares/night terrors
- Negative changes in mood
- Withdrawal and senses of hopelessness
- Physical pain such as gastrointestinal distress and headaches

Neurological & Physiological Development:

- Chronically elevated stress hormones
- Sensitization of the brain’s stress response pathways
- Reduced brain volume and connectivity
- Reduced dopamine and serotonin levels that can impact mood, learning, and decision-making.
- Heightened inflammatory activity

Cognitive Development:

- Dysregulation of attention
- Worse executive functioning
- Reduced memory function
- Immediate and persisting educational challenges
- Impairment in language abilities

These negative consequences are likely to be even more pronounced for migrant children, many of whose parents are seeking asylum, as they are both coming from impoverished or traumatic environments and also challenged by a new cultural and linguistic environment while they are detained.

The broad consensus of the psychological and neuroscientific communities is that the current US government policies on forced separation can only be seen as a form of extreme emotional abuse on the children that are being separated. This has a real potential for causing long-term, and very possibly permanent, harm. As scientists and clinicians, we implore you to end this inhumane practice and to do everything in your power to develop policies that minimize trauma to these children and families.

Sincerely,
Concerned Scientists, Clinicians, & Educators
